REPUBLICAN JUDICIAL TICKET WINS

3 REPUBLICAN JUDGES SEATED BY LANDSLIDE

In one of the hottest judicial elections held in the 12th judicial district comprised of Will, Iroquois and Kankakee counties Tuesday, the Republican candidates, James V. Bartley of Will County, Luther B. Bratton of Kankakee county and Roscoe C. South of Iroquois county were swept in office in the Republican landslide.

Edwin L. Wilson the sitting judge and head of the Democratic ticket, was very badly defeated, the Republican lead being over 4,000 votes. The slot machine issue defeated Wilson. The chief issue in the campaign was Wilson's record in issuing injunctions protecting slot machines and law breaking saloons. In spite of this Judge Wilson carried Will county but ran behind in Kankakee and Iroquois counties.

The contest was fiercest in Joliet. Judge Wilson cracked the Republican slate in Will county, his home, but the anti-Wilson forces in the two other counties over came this advantage.

In 94 out of the 98 precincts in Will County, Judge Wilson was top man with 11,835 votes. He was 2,710 votes ahead of the low man on the Republican ticket in the county, Roscoe C. South of Watseka.

In Kankakee county, Wilson ran more than 4,000 votes behind the Republicans. In Iroquois county he trailed by 3,000 votes. Thus his Will county lead was rubbed out.

All three Republican candidates rolled-up over 20,000 votes each. Following are the returns from the three counties:

	Will	Iroquois	Kankakee
Republican ticket
Bartley	10178	3702	6446
Bratton	9448	3737	6902
South	9405	4453	6579
Democratic ticket
Wilson	12394	1260	2342
Parrish	8369	1131	3407
Danforth	7030	830	2127
Non Partisan ticket
Saum	6707	2792	3637
Streeter	2666	1218	4113
Schoenstedt	4759	1026	2866
Independent ticket
McCabe	7906	335	337
Taylor	3892	816	486

The Republican pluralities ranged over 4500 votes for the three counties.

Locally the returns were: FRANKFORT—Bartley, 96; Bratton, 98; South, 110; Wilson, 102; Parrish 70; Danforth 63; Saum 145; Streeter 104; Schoenstedt 127; McCabe 59; Taylor 31.

NEW LENOX: FIRST—Bartley, 100; Bratton 99; South 98; Wilson 70; Parrish 60; Danforth 52; Saum, 30; Streeter, 18; Schoenstedt 31; McCabe 21; Taylor 7.

SECOND—Bartley, 107; Bratton 101; South 106; Wilson 69; Parrish 58; Danforth 50; Saum 65; Streeter 43; Schoenstedt 39; McCabe 55; Taylor 37.

Dump Rubbish In Village Hall Lot

At the meeting of the Mokena village board it was reported that some one has been using the Village hall yard for a dumping ground. A pile of rubbish was discovered in the rear of the hall but where it came from is a mystery.

Pay Off On Bond Issue But No New Hall In Sight

The village of Frankfort is in a rather peculiar position relative to a new village hall. On June 5th a $500 bond of the $12,000 bond issue voted last year for the new village hall became due, and was to be paid this week, but the village is still without a new hall. The village board had a PWA project in mind when they started the new hall idea, but after the local bond had been floated they found the PWA funds for municipal projects had been exhausted. Inquiry at PWA headquarters were met with the information that if new appropriations were made by the federal government the Frankfort project would be among the first on the list.

A month ago Mayor George Sangmeister took the matter up again with the PWA and was advised that at present, it is uncertain what the PWA can do in the matter due to lack of funds. Mayor Sangmeister also contacted Senator Scott Lucas, on the same matter and the latter replied that he could not assume the responsibility of saying the project should be started due to the uncertainty of PWA. Now the Frankfort officials are in a rather difficult situation. If they drop the first plans and build a smaller sized hall with the funds on hand, they would be on the spot if PWA should receive new appropriations and stand ready to go ahead with the project as originally planned, but if such a grant is not forthcoming soon it will not be possible to wait longer until another bond becomes due as the fund on hand will decrease yearly. In the meantime Frankfort has to worry along without a hall.

Squalus Disaster Again Focuses Attention On Submarine's Value as Weapon of War

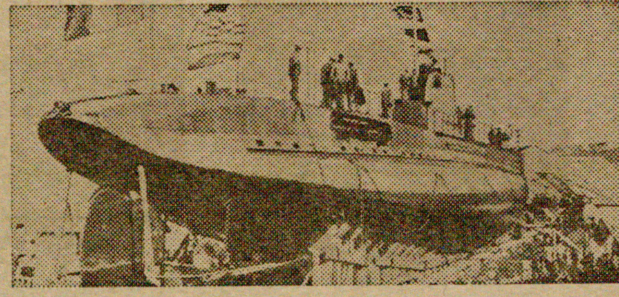

UNITED STATES—The submarine Saury, sister ship of the ill-fated Squalus. The U. S. has 106 U-boats, including 19 under construction as of November 15. Sixty-seven of these are over-age.

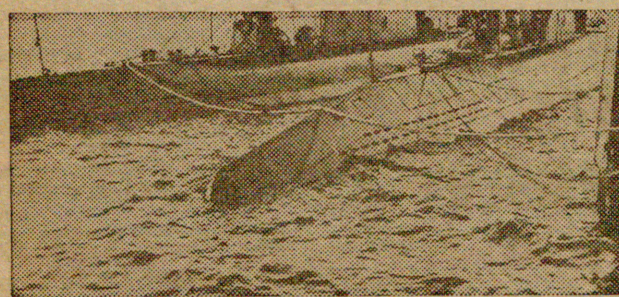

BRITAIN—The Sunfish pictured aground at Isle of Wight after dragging her anchors. Britain has 60 subs, plus 13 under construction. Only 14 of these are listed as over-age.

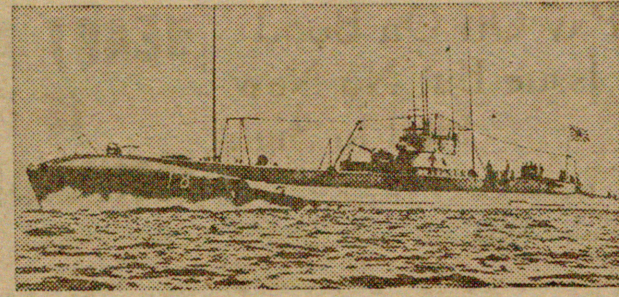

ITALY—Photo shows Mussolini's submarines going through a remarkable series of formations during maneuvers. The No. 1 sub power, 83 of Italy's 90 boats are under age and she is building 39 more.

FRANCE—The new Ceres is launched at Rouen. Third among world submarine powers, France has 76 craft, all under age. In addition she has approximately 20 new U-boats under construction.

GERMANY—Nazi subs at rest. All of Germany's 43 craft are under age and 28 more were being built as of last November 15. Since then the naval limitations treaty with Britain has been broken.

JAPAN—The first class submarine I-55, pride of a small but efficient U-boat fleet. Of 57 craft, 41 are under age. In addition the Nipponese have three boats under construction.

Anti-Sub Devices Are Perfected But U-Boats Also Gain New Power; Italy Has Biggest Fleet.

By WALTER P. SHEPPARD

Battleships parade the might of nations. Submarines are hidden might, forgotten in peacetime as they slink through the deep waters. Which is one reason why the Squalus disaster off Portsmouth, N. H., created such interest. Between wars men forget how submarines raise havoc with shipping, how one tiny U-boat can conceivably smash a mighty fleet.

But navies do not forget, and the submarine which came very close to winning the World War for Germany will be an equally important factor in the next conflict. True, anti-sub devices have been perfected, but so have the submarines, so that the relative importance of these weapons is about the same.

True to tradition, great maritime nations like Japan, the United States and Great Britain have placed little defensive emphasis on U-boats in the years since Versailles, because sea-faring nations seldom fight each other. The submarine is primarily an offensive craft for use against powers which control the seas. That is why Germany used them so effectively last time, and why both Germany and Italy are placing so much confidence in them for the next war.

Italy Leads the Way.

Last November 15 a report by the United States navy department revealed that Italy is the world's No. 1 submarine power, boasting 129 such vessels when her current building program is completed. Of these, 39 were under construction last November and 83 were under-age, leaving only 7 obsolete.

Germany's submarine fleet, while one of the world's smallest, is magnificently efficient. Every one of her 43 working craft last November 15 were under age, and 28 new U-boats were under construction. Since Reichsfuehrer Hitler denounced the British-German naval pact in April, the Nazis are expected to push full steam ahead on their submarine program.

This is an entirely fitting offensive measure, because Germany knows her probable enemy in the next war would be Great Britain. Minus colonies herself, self-sufficient and with no shipping to protect, the Reich can devote all her maritime war-making to preying on boats of her enemies.

Only 20 U. S. Subs Under-Age.

America ranks near the bottom of the scale as a world submarine power, though numerically she is second. As of last November 15, only 20 of her subs were under age, fewer than any of the other five great powers. When all new boats are completed, however, and when over-age craft are counted in, this nation has 106 submarines. Since the Squalus disaster was the first American U-boat mishap in 12 years, during which other nations have suffered repeated accidents, the United States fleet is apparently in pretty fair shape.

Veteran submarine fighters who recall World War experiences shudder at the possibilities of these weapons, once known as "tin cigars." One of these men, Lieut.

J. F. Goodwin of Portland, Ore., who commanded the R-4 during the war, has made the private prediction that if similar conditions were to prevail in the next war, the nation with the largest U-boat fleet would wipe out its enemies' armed and commercial fleets in a few months, thereby starving the adversary into surrender.

Marine Paradox.

The submarine is a paradox in that she is at once the least expensive and potentially the most dangerous ocean craft. Costing from $3,000,000 to $5,000,000, she might destroy dozens of merchant or warships with her deadly torpedoes and still escape.

Surprise is the big factor in a sub's attack, and conversely, its greatest weakness. If a small surface destroyer sees it first, there is a 50-50 chance that the U-boat will be hit. If sighted by an airplane the boat is also in great danger. But as a lone-wolf raider and spy this nautilus is worth her weight in gold.

Valuable as Spies.

Navies don't advertise it, but in war games the submarines have occasionally crept to within a few hundred yards of warships that were on the lookout for them, jockeyed into position and been enabled to fire torpedoes that couldn't miss.

They can—as the German U-boats did—patrol off naval bases and harbors to keep the high command informed on ship movements. Their information probably led to the sinking of commercial and war craft.

There's little chance of escaping a torpedo. This weapon, first perfected in 1865 by an English naval officer, can travel several thousand yards, carry hundreds of pounds of explosives and can be set on any course at any depth. It will go straight or along a circular path and is sure to spell disaster if it strikes a ship below the water line.

Combat them? Navies have perfected detectors which sometimes spot a submarine engine at close range, but even so the craft may be defenseless against this sausage-shaped phenomenon that can dive and zigzag at will. Patrol boats and destroyers sometimes corner them, however, and in shallow water subs can be sunk with depth bombs or cornered with nets and mines.

Sometimes, as when a phantom submarine attacked a British destroyer in the Mediterranean, these playful fellows pretend they're "dead" and confound the enemy. After a few depth bombs are dropped an oil slick and pieces of debris appear on the surface as evidence that the U-boat is no more. While the destroyer steams proudly away the U-boat captain chuckles to himself, for all he did was shoot out a lot of loose junk in a torpedo tube. (Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

Dice Thrown for Bibles At St. Ives, England

Dice were thrown for Bibles at St. Ives, England, when six children received a Testament each. The ceremony was in accordance with the will of Rev. Robert Wilde, of Oundle, made 200 years ago. He left $250 to St. Ives and stipulated that the interest be used in the purchase of Bibles, to be disposed of by the minister and church wards to the children of the parish.

U. S. Disguises Testing Device To Spy on Automobile Drivers

A black rubber tube laid across the highway and connected at either end with a simple instrument staked at the side of the road forms the basis for analysis of how the motor public behaves in its use of the highways. This special study is being made by the public roads bureau.

The tube is inconspicuous and looks much like an expansion joint—one of its good features. Most motorists will not see the tube and will not be aware of making a record. Other devices, such as checking by observers, or by motion-picture records, are less useful because they are likely to make drivers self-conscious and cause them to slow down for fear of a speed trap. A record of natural driving on a representative stretch of road is what is wanted.

The tubes are placed at 50-foot intervals on the stretch of road under study—a half mile, perhaps. When an automobile crosses a tube, a wave or puff of air is forced into the roadside instrument and moves a diaphragm which causes an electrical contact. The tubes are disconnected at the middle of the road so that a vehicle passing on one side of the road does not register on the instrument on the other side.

Wires run to a recording apparatus in which a strip of paper unrolls under a set of pens. Each passing car leaves a pair of pen strokes—for front and rear wheels. Knowing the spacing of the tubes and the speed of the moving paper it is easy to calculate the speed of any car.

The device is particularly useful in studying the passing of slow vehicles by faster ones. On a two-lane highway the pen-marked strip reveals the faster car overtaking the slower; then swinging across the center and registering on both lanes; then running in the left lane, and finally swinging back to the right. Distances and speeds can be calculated exactly, and by tabulating many passages it is possible to compute, for example, how long a straightaway stretch should be.

A single tube with the roadside instruments connected to an electric counter makes a convenient and inexpensive device for registering the number of vehicles using a road.

Senator Harrison decides to risk a battle with the President over revision of taxes . . . President still hopes to prevent action . . . Sooner or later congress will take profits out of war . . . Opinion in Washington is that President could force his own renomination, but that he could not be re-elected.

WASHINGTON.—President Roosevelt is on the defensive, with congress carrying the ball for tax revision that will encourage business. Capitol Hill is following Pat Harrison, chairman of the senate finance committee, who has long favored adjusting taxes in the hope of regaining prosperity, and has decided to risk a battle with the White House if necessary.

The lines are drawn. The President is still hoping to prevent action. A hasty glance over recent references to taxation by "Dear Alben" Barkley will show the real views of the White House. Barkley consults the White House before salting his soup. No congressman thinks Barkley was talking out of turn when he predicted mere continuance of the nuisance taxes, plus freezing the social security taxes.

The clash between Harrison and Barkley excites the politically minded, which means all of congress, because Roosevelt's strength thrown to Barkley made him Democratic leader of the senate, by a majority of one, over Harrison.

John W. Hanes, undersecretary of the treasury, is applauding Harrison whenever he thinks Corcoran and Cohen are looking the other way. Henry Morgenthau approves Harrison's course also, but his deep loyalty to Roosevelt prevents open enthusiasm.

The big question mark is whether Roosevelt will risk vetoing a probusiness tax bill which will scrap some of his dearest brain children, especially the remnant remaining of the tax on undistributed earnings. Much is involved, including the possibility of a rift between the President and Harry Hopkins. Rumors are rife that Hopkins expressed considerable disappointment over the early demise of the appeasement program in his recent talk with the President and Justice William O. Douglas.

Surprise That Harrison Should Become So Militant

Hopkins is just as sore as the President over the defiant stand taken by the United States Chamber of Commerce, but he does not want the President to kick all of big business in the face just because neither likes the resolutions adopted by the chamber. The chamber, Hopkins is said to have urged on the President, is not really the voice of all business—not more than a modicum of it, as a matter of fact. But Hopkins faced an angered and much-goaded President. The left-wingers had been working up Mr. Roosevelt's ire with considerable adroitness, using the chamber's unfortunate language as salt on his wounds, and taking advantage of the absence of Dr. Hopkins' pacifying influence.

Development of the situation came as a surprise to most of Washington. Everyone knew that the President did not want any serious tax revision, and knew why he did not want it. The President was eager to retain that penalty on undistributed corporation earnings. He had been advised that there was not a chance of retaining it if it ever reached a vote.

The surprise was that Senator Harrison should become so militant. Not because his ideas about tax revision to encourage business were secret, but because it was thought he had little desire to make a hopeless fight against the President. Also that he believed the President eventually would be forced to yield in order to produce sufficiently better business conditions to make Democratic success possible in 1940.

Sooner or Later Congress Will Take Profit Out of War

It is very difficult to run counter to the contention that the profit should be taken out of war. For that reason it is very likely that, perhaps not at this session of congress, but sooner or later, congress will pass some such legislation as that proposed by Sen. Josh Lee, or by Sen. Homer T. Bone.

The country has been thoroughly sold on the idea that a group of wicked international munitions makers are always stirring up trouble and provoking war in order to make profits. There is just enough proof of the contention to make it politically dangerous to go against it.

The difficulty, as practical army and navy men see it, is that in order to prevent someone from making a profit the country may, to just that extent, curtail its own power to make war. To put it another way, taking the profit out of war may succeed, but the effectiveness of the country in war may be impaired sufficiently by the restrictions and taxation involved so that the war may drag on for twice as long as it otherwise would.

This is on the old patriotic assumption, of course, that eventually the United States would win any war in which it was engaged. It does not contemplate the other possibility—that the United States by this impairment of its fighting effectiveness might lose the war.

It Would Remove a Very Potent Cause for War

Actually, when war comes, no matter whether it is brought about by people anxious to make a profit or by some causes which even the munition makers could not control, there will be an overwhelming desire to take advantage of every ounce of effectiveness possible. It will be desired—and almost compulsory—that every man, woman and child shall do his or her utmost to help win the war. There would be scant consideration given, for example, to any proposal to hold down the number of hours men or women might work in munition works, if our army or navy were in a life-and-death struggle which might depend on an adequate supply of ammunition. As were the French, for example, during the Verdun fighting.

The danger of the proposal is not what would be the temper of the people after war came, but that the prospect of taxing all the profits which might be made might discourage adequate preparation for war supplies, by private investors, before the war came.

Believed President Cannot Win if He's Renominated

A majority of Democrats in Washington, according to a canvass made by the astute political expert of the Washington Star, G. Gould Lincoln, believe that President Roosevelt can force his own renomination if he chooses, but a considerable number believe that he can not be elected if nominated.

Those who believe that he can force his own renomination, according to Mr. Lincoln, include both New Dealers and conservatives. But as to whether he can be elected if nominated the line of cleavage is clear. Those who are New Dealers believe Mr. Roosevelt can break the anti-third term tradition. Those who are conservative believe almost universally that he could not be elected.

In fact many of them, still according to Mr. Lincoln, are talking about setting up a third party, with old line Democrats as candidates and an old line Democratic platform in the event that Mr. Roosevelt does force his own renomination.

This writer believes that Mr. Lincoln's reporting is excellent—that it gives a perfect picture of the situation as it is at present. But this writer differs as to the projection of the present situation. Actually it seems most unlikely—unless there is some change not now visible on the horizon—that Mr. Roosevelt will be able to force his own renomination.

Take the one element of the picture that practically all of the conservatives believe that Roosevelt would fail of election if he did win the nomination. And then ponder a moment on the recent activities of the Democrats on Capitol Hill. Even more important, ponder on the way many of the Democratic senators and representatives are talking.

Find Many Democrats Would Prefer Another Candidate

The point is that a great many Democratic senators and representatives would prefer some other Democrat than Roosevelt for the four years beginning in January, 1941. In fact they would prefer a Democrat who agreed more nearly with Vice President John Nance Garner, or with Sen. Harry Flood Byrd. But they would much rather have Roosevelt continued in the White House than for a Republican to take his place.

This is positively not true of all of the Democrats on Capitol Hill, but it is true of quite a sprinkling.

Now suppose the conviction spreads among this group that Roosevelt might win the nomination, but would not be elected if he did. The inevitable result would be that every one of this particular category of Democratic leaders would be very anxious to have Mr. Roosevelt defeated for the nomination.

Roosevelt's chief strength at the moment, so far as getting the nomination is concerned, is the belief of so many Democrats that if he were defeated for the nomination, and a conservative Democrat named, that the New Dealers would bolt, thus throwing the election almost surely to the Republicans.

But this fear would be completely offset if the conviction should grow that the nomination of Roosevelt himself would not result in the continuance of the spoils of office in the hands of the Democrats.

The picture would then be that every conservative Democratic leader would be fighting to defeat Roosevelt for renomination with the thought that if the Democrats are going to lose anyway, it would be better to leave control of the organization in the hands of the conservatives. But—much more important than that is the serious doubt that there would be a third party movement of New Dealers if a conservative should be named. In fact there is as much bluffing all round the board as though the game were poker and not politics.

ADD variety and color, as well as smartness, to your summer wardrobe by making the charming accessory set in gay printed cottons like linen, pique or gingham. It's very easy to do—even the gloves, which have the new, roomy, blunt fingers. Your pattern (1643), includes a step-by-step sew chart that tells you exactly what to do.

This princess dress for afternoons is exactly what you want for hot summer days. This style (1752) is refreshingly simple, and it has a beautifully smooth, slim figure-line, upped sleeves, and a square neckline dipped in the

CHOCOLATE SILVER CAKE
See Recipe Below.

Of Course You Can Bake

"I didn't have good luck with my cake baking today." You and I have both heard homemakers say just that—reason enough perhaps for our getting right down to cases today and finding out just what it is that makes for good luck—or bad luck—as the case may be in this cake baking business.

Of course it really isn't a case of luck at all, for the right proportions of the right ingredients combined in the right way and baked at the right oven temperature eliminate luck entirely and assure baking success not sometimes but always.

Information Please.

Of course you own a measuring cup but have you looked at it critically to see whether or not it has a rim which extends above the accurate cup measure? If it has a rim, do you measure the ingredients just to this point accurately, or clear to the top inaccurately?

Do you always sift the flour once just before measuring?

Do you use a fine granulated sugar when making cakes? There is a difference, you know.

Do you cream the shortening and mix the cake with a beating motion, not a stirring motion?

Do you level off the teaspoon measures of baking powder, salt or soda with a knife so as to be sure they, too, are accurate?

Do you start the oven 10 to 15 minutes in advance so it will be uniformly hot before the cake is placed in it?

Do you use a small, inexpensive oven thermometer for securing accurate oven temperatures if your range has no oven heat-control?

These are some of the chief factors, careful attention to which helps to spell success in cake baking. Try them out in the group of favorite cake recipes given below. I think you will like them and the recipes too.

Lemon Cake.

- ½ cup butter
- 1 cup granulated sugar
- 2 eggs
- 1½ cups cake flour

Mix and sift all dry ingredients and add alternately with the milk and extract, beginning and ending with the flour mixture. Fold in the beaten whites of the eggs. Bake as loaf cake in a moderate oven (350 degrees Fahrenheit) for 35 to 40 minutes.

Old Spice Wonder.

ron, raisins, and nuts with the ¼ cup of flour which was reserved and add to the cake mixture. Add vanilla. Bake 35 to 40 minutes in a moderate oven (350 degrees Fahrenheit).

Cream the butter, add the sugar and beat well. Sift the flour, baking powder and salt, and add alternately with the milk and vanilla. Beat the egg whites until stiff and fold into cake. Bake in two layers in a moderate oven (365 degrees Fahrenheit) 25 to 30 minutes. Top with chocolate butter icing.

Cocoa Cake.

- ¼ teaspoon salt
- 1½ teaspoons baking powder
- ½ teaspoon soda
- 1 cup sour milk
- 1 teaspoon vanilla extract

Cream the butter and add the sugar slowly. Separate eggs, beat yolks and add. Sift the dry ingredients and add alternately with the sour milk and vanilla. Beat the egg whites until stiff and fold in carefully. Bake in two layers in a moderate oven (365 degrees Fahrenheit) for 25 to 30 minutes, or as a loaf cake (at 350 degrees Fahrenheit) for 40 to 45 minutes.

Melt the chocolate over warm water. Cream the butter and add the sugar, slowly, beating vigorously. Beat the yolks of the eggs until thick and add to the sugar and the chocolate and mix well. Sift the flour, salt, baking powder, and add alternately with the milk and extract, beginning with the flour mixture. Beat egg whites until they are stiff, and fold into cake. 'Reveille!'

By GRAHAM SAUNDERS
(Released by Associated Newspapers
WNU Service.)

HE WAS just a private, Drusilla noticed, as he lounged easily into the drug store and draped his tall form against a pillar, waiting attention; but she had to admit reluctantly that he was the handsomest man she had ever seen in all her 26 years. And the daughter of a small-town druggist is likely to see quite a few men in ten years of clerk subbing.

With infinite patience Drusilla helped old Mrs. Gordon select a new face powder, some new rouge and several other articles of makeup suitable for a 16-year-old flapper, and when the 60-year-old devotee of the modernists had departed she came quietly up to the tall soldier and asked him what he wanted.

"Gosh, sister," he confided in a tone that would have been fresh in another, "all I want just this minute is to feast my eyes on you. I guess I know, now, why I stayed single so long!" Drusilla laughed merrily and then said: "Our ice-cream sodas are refreshing, uh, to the memory as well as otherwise!" and he lounged over to the fountain.

Later he discovered that he needed a toothbrush, some shaving cream, shampoo, a special face soap and a box of chocolates. The latter was the cause of their better acquaintance, as he selected a rather inferior brand in a very plain wrapper and after a swift glance she said: "These are very fine. I buy them myself, and the box is sure to please even the most fastidious girl! You know," she added naively, "so many of us like to keep the ribbons as reminders!"

"Uh—thanks for the tip. I'm a stick in the mud. Have you a large collection of ribbons?"

"Not too many; none that has any especial sentimental attraction, if that's what you mean," she retorted.

Later—it must have been six in the evening—she looked up as the last customer of a rush crowd cleared from the store, and Drusilla was startled to note the large white-wrapped box on the soda fountain table. With a strange thrill she picked it up and saw lettered neatly in one corner her name, and the strange premonition that it was from the tall soldier proved correct, and she paused an instant to ponder how he could have discovered her name.

Opening the package, Drusilla knew a strange thrill as she read the scrawled note within. If she could overcome her scruples against a common soldier on a common private's pay, would she meet him outside the shop at closing time and go canoeing with him? If she would! And Drusilla's eyes shone and her face glowed all the evening until her father finished putting up prescriptions and came out to relieve her. She walked on air as she ran to powder her nose and she laughed shakily as she removed the ribbon from the chocolate box and pinned it with the tiny crescent diamond pin to the front of her dress at the collar. And tucking the box of chocolates under her arm, she went out to the street.

He stood in the shadows, close to her father's shop, and his curly black head was bare as he came eagerly forward to greet her. Ardent admiration shone in his blue eyes as he took her box and touched her elbow lightly, piloted her across town by the big, dimly lit library and down to the river where the bathhouses and canoes were.

Later, as they drifted along under the sweeping willow branches, he hummed, and then at her urging sang in a fine baritone the exquisite words and music to "Girl of My Dreams," and then fell strangely silent. "Why so silent?" she teased, and he answered honestly, "Afraid your boss wouldn't let you off, Miss Dexter!" and she knew a guilty, glad thrill; he didn't know she was the only daughter and heiress to the Dexter drug stores—didn't guess she would one day inherit the fortune made by the famous "Bixell" drugs! And then they talked and talked and talked.

"Do you truly have to wait for some one to die for promotion, Terry?" for they had become Terry and Drusilla in four hours of magic moonlight and canoeing!

"Uh, regular soldiers have to wait in line, advancement—but I'll never hate reveille any more!" he ended eloquently as he beached the craft skillfully.

"Why?" she asked softly as he helped her ashore.

"Because I've heard it for the last time, the real reveille, the awakening to life and love and ambition! From now on I'm a civvie, hustling for regular promotion!"

"You mean you'll quit the army and go into business?" she asked.

"Yup," he answered joyously, "got to hustle now if I'm going to win the one girl!"

"What will you do?" she asked faintly.

"Sell bonds and make love to you," he said exultantly.

"Do you have to?" she asked softly against the rough tan of his coat as she burrowed her nose deeper into the cigary-scented wool.

"You don't answer reveille but once, darling," he said, tipping her face up to kiss her tenderly. "Once you're awake you stay awake."

"DEAR MRS. SPEARS: I have your Book 1—SEWING for the Home Decorator, and the directions for slipcovers are so clear in the sketches that I have decided to cover my living room furniture which consists of a davenport, a club chair and a wing chair. I would like to have your suggestions for colors for these and for curtains."

With this letter there was a detailed description of the rug in the room. There have been a good many letters of this type lately, so I am showing you here how to analyze the colors in a figured rug and use them as a guide in planning a room.

It is not important that the rug color scheme be followed exactly, but do make a little chart of the rug colors as shown here at the left. If you do not wish to repeat the background color for your walls, use a pale tone of one of the other colors. A stronger tone of any color in the rug may become your accent color.

NOTICE: Book 1—SEWING for the Home Decorator, and No. 2, Gifts, Novelties and Embroideries, are now 15 cents each, or both books for 25 cents. Readers who have not secured their copies of these two books should send in their orders immediately, as no more copies will be available, when the present supply is exhausted. Your choice of the QUILT LEAFLET illustrating 36 authentic patchwork stitches; or the RAG RUG LEAFLET, will be included with orders for both books for the present, but the offer may be withdrawn at any time. Leaflets are six cents each when ordered separately.

Everyone should have copies of these two books containing 96 How to Sew articles by Mrs. Spears, that have not appeared in the paper. Send your order at once to Mrs. Spears, 210 S. Desplaines St., Chicago, Ill.

Seventeen Year Locusts Appearing

Quite a number of people have reported seeing the 17 year locusts on young fruit and forest trees. "These locusts are not actually true locusts," states Farm Adviser, C. A. Hughes of Cook County, "but they are the Cicada."

"The locust is really a grasshopper with short feelers and they eat or devour foliage. The Cicada, on the other hand, is a bug that has piercing mouth parts and sucks sap from plants for its food. Therefore, no kind of spray that is a stomach poison can be applied to kill the Cicada. The Cicada is one of the strangest insects known. There are various broods in different localities all over the United States. There may be two or three broods during the 17 year cycle. The insects that are out now lay their eggs in the new growth of twigs or trees by stinging the twig and depositing the egg in the wood. Usually the twig dies from the point where it is stung outward. Later in the season we will see these dead twigs on the trees. This causes the damage that the Cicada does. After while the egg hatches into a worm and feeds on the young growth of the trees and drops to the ground where it burrows and lives almost 17 years before it emerges again. One of the peculiarities of the Cicada is that it has well designed veins in its wings. Near the center of these wings the veins come together and form a letter 'W'. Superstitious people have thought the appearance of the Cicada with the 'W' on its wings indicated war. About the best way to protect young trees from Cicada damage is to cover the tree with mosquito bar at this time and leave them covered until the insects have disappeared. Obviously this is impossible except on rather small fruit or shade trees. The Cicada makes a peculiar noise that is a piercing whirr. Many entomologists have speculated as to the reason for this noise. Some seem to think it has no more significance than the rattle of an automobile or the snoring of a sleeping person, except that it may be rather annoying."

Col. Don C. Hall Attends Passage of Old Age Pension

Col. and Mrs. Don C. Hall, Mokena's famous globe trotters, when not attending worlds fairs, attend sessions of the Illinois state legislature.

Both being vitally interested in the old age pension bill before the salons hitch-hiked to Springfield this week Monday and four hours after casting their votes in the judicial election they arrived in Springfield. They attended the session of the house of representatives on Tuesday and saw the house by the overwhelming vote of 105 to 10 approve a bill designed to assure the aged of the state a monthly income of $30.

Sponsored by the Republican controlled house committee on public welfare and carrying out a pledge of the Republican party at its last state convention, the measure was sent to the senate.

The measure provides that the total payments to the aged, when added to all other income of the recipient, shall total at least $30 a month. For example, an aged person having an income of $10 a month would receive a pension of $20. Persons having no income would receive the full $30 in pension funds.

Two weeks ago the house passed and sent to the senate a bill setting a maximum of $40 a month to old age pension recipients, and pending on the house calendar is a senate bill setting the maximum monthly payment at $45.

The $30 minimum "guarantee pension" was approved amid charges of politics, insufficient funds to meet the proposed increased cost and raising of the question of whether the federal government would contribute to a system based on the payment plan.

Thirty-two Democrats joined the almost solid Republican vote for the bill. A number of Democrats, however, were silent on the roll call. Only two Republicans, Representatives Calvin Johnson, Belleville, and Henry F. Scarborough, Payson, voted against the measure.

Representatives Hugh Green, Rep. of Jacksonville, William Lawler of Springfield and Andy O'Neill, Dem. of Springfield voted with the prevailing side.

The measure was passed after a lengthy debate in which Republicans pleaded that the house should do something to aid the state's aged. They denied Democratic claims that the increased pensions could not be paid unless taxes are greatly increased.

Representative James Boyle Dem. of Chicago, who handles administration legislation in the house, declared that a $30 monthly minimum pension would mean the state would have to raise an additional $40,000,000.

Republicans, including Representative Dennis Collins of DeKalb, denied that the cost would be so high, declaring that the cost would be only $16,000,000 more, of which the federal government would pay half.

Shepherd of the Hills Country a Land of Beauty

A most interesting person to meet in the Missouri Ozarks is Mrs. Pearl Spurlock, Missouri's famous taxi driver. She has been a licensed taxi operator for 22 years and has hauled thousands of visitors to points of interest in the famed "Shepherd of the Hills" country. Mrs. Spurlock is familiar with every foot of ground in the hill country and has given a great many lectures on this beautiful country as well as on the persons made famous by Harold Bell Wright. As she travels thru the Ozarks she lectures on the points of interest, visited and the historical side of the country and its people.

Mrs. Spurlock knew the people intimately who were made the characters in Harold Bell Wright's famous story.

She was born in Harrison County, Mo., and with her husband located in Branson, Mo., during the World War. They engaged in the garage business and operated a couple of Ford taxis. Upon the death of her husband, Mrs. Spurlock began operating her own taxi in the Shepherd of the Hills country and started her series of lectures.

She is the author of a book entitled "Over the Old Ozark Trails" in the Shepherd of the Hills country. In this book Mrs. Spurlock gives a very vivid word picture of the beautiful Ozark country and its equally interesting people.

The Shepherd of the Hills country extends thru parts of Stone and Taney Counties. There are two very pretty town sites, one known as Hollister and the other Branson. When you enter Hollister, you feel as though you are in another world, as all the buildings on the main street are built in the "Old English" style. This is the smallest incorporated village in the world with a paved street.

Hollister is a tourist town while Branson is a business town. Branson is located on beautiful lake Taneycom. Before the Civil War Judge Taney of the United States Supreme court would come down in the hills many times each year for a rest and a hunt. There was plenty of big game. So Taney County was named after Judge Taney. Then when the Powersite dam was finished in year 1913 it formed a lake in wide curves from there 25 miles above. A great flat promontory known as Table Rock, where plans are being made for a second enormous dam, is only about 5 miles from the head of the Lake. Taneycom lake is named from Taney County, Missouri--Taney-Co-Mo.

The Ozarks are noted for the wonderfully pure air. There are 59 varieties of trees in the Ozarks. The black gum is the first tree to turn in the fall; it gets a gorgeous crimson red. There are walnut, hickory, butternut, chakepin and a very few hazel nut. The cedars stay green all winter. It very seldom gets so cold that the lake freezes over.

The Shepherd of the Hills country as you can see it today, has a beautiful, romantic, wooded, winding narrow road running thru it. There are all kinds of wild birds. The cardinals are gorgeous in their flaming coats of red. Almost every kind of wild flower grows there. Just one summer season is far insufficient to inspect the coves, springs, streams, mountains and natural phenomena in the immediate Taneycom and the Shepherd of the Hills region. This is a land of paradise for artists.

The entire region was made world famous by Harold Bell Wright when he wrote "The Shepherd of the Hills" over 32 years ago.

Uncle Matt's Cabin, Mutton Hollow, The Old Notch Post Office and other interesting spots mentioned in the book are to be seen today just as they were at the time Mr. Wright visited this country in 1903.

You will see the natives all along the highways weaving baskets. This is a very pleasant as well as profitable work, as they sell enough to tourists or "Furners" as they say, help them live a "right smart while". The baskets are made in various sizes and shapes and mostly of white oak.

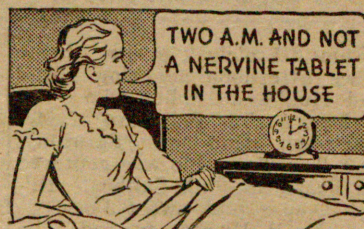

The Ozarks cover an area of 75,000 square miles and are in the shape of an egg.

These hills are older than the Rocky Mountains, thought to be the first part of North America continent to rise from the sea. Fernando De Soto first discovered them in 1541. He and his band of adventurers are said to have met the Indian Chief, "Ozarkus" at the large spring where Cotter, Arkansas now stands 65 mi. south of Branson, Mo., and the legend states that these mountains derived their name from that famous Indian chief.

The inhabitants of this region are a kind, hospitable people of a very easy going nature. Nothing seems to worry them.

No doubt many people wonder how anyone could grow crops on the rocky soil. That seems easy to the natives. When they plow this rocky soil it brings the dirt up and the rocks down. They then plant their seeds located on beautiful lake Taneycom choose and when it rains, it washes the dirt down and the rocks up and the rocks hold the moisture. Therefore, it doesn't require as much rain there to grow a crop as it does in other places, where there are no rocks. You can move a rock and always find moisture underneath.

A most worthy and outstanding institution is the "School of the Ozarks" near Branson. Here the under privileged youth of the hills are given an education and training which will better fit them to fight their many battles in life. The school is supported by the people contributing financial aid in many ways.

FLAG DAY

Where Do Flags Come From? Uncle Sam Stitches His Own

THE stars and stripes that fly from Army outposts and buildings everywhere on Flag Day, June 14, are all manufactured by the United States Army Quartermaster Corps in Philadelphia, Pa. All bunting, regimental colors and standards are manufactured there. Right: Two seamstresses cut out the stars for official bunting flags to be sent to Army posts.

Next step in the manufacturing is the joining together of the stripes. After the 13 stripes have been gathered, it is sent to a second department, where the stars are sewed on. This completes the manufacturing process. Finished flags are then sent to be inspected and packed.

Each flag undergoes rigid examination by an experienced inspector. Some of the colors are valued up to $500, and should there be any fault the flag is returned to the sewing room. Inspection passed, it is sent to its final destination, the United States Army.

A pair of the groom's trousers was displayed and the guests were asked to identify the many articles, ranging from a postage stamp to a compact found in his pockets. Even though your income has been curtailed, you cannot afford to let your home run down. Property deteriorates fast—so fast sometimes that a bank will refuse to renew a loan without a substantial pay off on the principal.

Property that is kept well painted and decorated inside and out is an asset, both to the owner and to the bank that holds the mortgage. Painting now may save embarrassment later.

ORLAND PARK

The following resolution has been passed by the Orland Park Village Board relative to remedy a complaint which has been lodged with the board that certain public streets have been obstructed with fencing:

"Whereas, a complaint has been made to this Board, that certain public streets have been obstructed with fencing and the use of public property for private purposes is being made in the Mark Kraus subdivision lying to the north of 142nd street between 100th ave., and the South-west highway, and

Whereas, there is no contract in existence with this village to permit the said use of public lands therefore,

Be It Resolved, by the President and Board of Trustees of the Village of Orland Park that

1. The Clerk notify by registered mail the person or persons whose fences are obstructing the use of village streets to remove the same, and

2. The Committee on Streets and Alleys make a survey of these streets with the view of encouraging the development of the Kraus subdivision as a residential area."

The Adult Bible class of the Orland Park Methodist church will hold their annual strawberry and ice cream social next Wednesday evening, June 14th at 8 p.m., on the church grounds. In case of rain the social will be held in the church basement. Everyone is cordially invited to come and enjoy a dish of ice cream with a generous portion of strawberries and a piece of delicious home made cake. Also coffee for those who drink it and pop for the kiddies.

The regular meeting of the Bible class will be held the following Wednesday, June 21st in the church basement. Members please do not forget the change in date of meeting which is a week later than usual. There will be no meeting of the class during July and August.

The Orland Park baseball team wishes to express their appreciation and thanks to the people of this community for the support they have shown the team and also wish to thank the following for the financial support given them, Burkhardt's Tavern, Peter Homering and Carl Bormet.

The Orland Park Fire Department was called to Palos Heights last Saturday afternoon when a gasoline stove exploded in a basement of a residence. When the firemen arrived they found the blaze had already been put out.

The St. Michaels church is planning to hold their annual chicken dinner and Fourth of July Celebration in the Forest Preserve west of town. Watch for more particulars.

The forest preserves in this section are swarming with millions of 17 year locusts. The insects are filling the air with their shrill notes and at times they are almost deafening when a big swarm gets into song action. So far no damage has been reported of any consequence.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. Deur, a daughter.

A very light vote was cast here in Tuesday's judicial election.

The 17 year locusts have been despoiling flowering plants in the Cooper cemetery. The leaves of the plants are being eaten by the insects.

Wm. Junker residing on a farm northwest of Orland who has been raising evergreen trees, reports the locusts have been eating the tender tops of the small trees. No particular remedy has been found which will effectively kill off the pests.

Mr. and Mrs. Oranger of the Capitol Dairy Co., and Geo. Yunker are enjoying a fishing trip in Wisconsin. They left last Friday.

The Orland Park Epworth League will meet this Sunday night in the M.E. church at 6:45 o'clock. A good attendance is desired.

Owning Electric Refrigerator By Budgeting

Budget-minded families, who need a large electric refrigerator, have long been hopeful that some manufacturer of this important household appliance eventually would produce a high quality electric refrigerator, with commodious storage space, at a price of $149.75. While it has seemed that such a development has been slow in materializing, the nation's leading maker of electric refrigerators finally has solved the problem.

According to Clarence E. Beagley local Frigidaire dealer, there have been few developments in electric refrigeration of greater interest to large families with modest incomes than the recent introduction of the new Super-Value "6" Frigidaire which is priced at less than $150.00.

"This model," Mr. Beagley says, "is the logical answer to the problem where a family must have a maximum of food storage space but must restrict their expenditure within certain limits. Low price, alone, isn't the only advantage of the Super-Value '6', because it includes every mechanical and basic construction feature of higher priced models, together with the regular five-year protection warranty on the entire sealed-in mechanism."

Outstanding advantages, such as the famous Meter-Miser, one-piece steel cabinet with beautiful Delux finish outside and stainless porcelain throughout its interior, exclusive Freon refrigerant Uni-Matic cold control and other important features, Mr. Beagley declares, make the Frigidaire Super-Value "6" a refrigerator that will meet every requirement of convenience economy and dependability for families who need a roomier electric refrigerator at a low price.

Whither the Young Graduate? Maybe This Holds the Answer

How the average high school student will be occupied one year from this June has been determined by a recent survey of 1,000 of last June's graduates. Teachers colleges, business colleges and vocational schools will absorb 140 graduates from the school surveyed, all in towns of approximately 3,000.

Students numbering 171 will attend college or university the first year, with a large percentage failing to return the second year. Lack of industrial opportunity has increased college enrollment. A total of 162 will remain at home without finding work. This figure includes girl graduates not planning to work.

Clerical jobs in grocery stores, filling stations, shoe stores, etc., will be filled by 236 graduates. This total includes delivery boys and "handy men," most of whom serve part time in a clerical capacity. Thirty-one salesmen also received the sheepskins this year. The latter includes house-to-house canvassers.

Agriculture will claim 190 graduates, many of whom are returning home to work. Included also are youths who are going to work on a farm for the first time. Seventy-seven are listed under a miscellaneous heading, including truck drivers, CCC enrollees, mechanics, waitresses and odd-job workers.

Orland Defeats Texaco

People who witnessed the game between Texaco and Orland Sunday really got their money's worth. The Orland team defeated Texaco by the close score of 3 to 2. It was Orland's second straight victory against two defeats to bring their percentage up to 500.

Bill O'Neil pitched for Orland and did not allow a hit until the 8th inning, when Texaco scored two runs on two hits. In the ninth, Texaco got two more hits but to no avail.

Orland made two runs in the 6th inning to go ahead, but Texaco tied it up in the 8th. The real thrill of the game came in the 9th inning when Orland put over the winning matches.

Hallinan singled to center, O'Neil bunted, and was safe at first, Hallinan going to second; Hallinan stole third; Migos walked, filling the bases. E. Uthe came to bat. He hit the ball a terrific drive to right center field, good for extra bases, but one run was enough to win.

Next Sunday June 11, Orland will travel to Midlothian. This game is bound to be a thriller, so why not come out and enjoy a real fast game of ball and help Orland on to victory. Game to start at 2:30 p. m.

Better Gov. Asso. Seeks to Halt The Spenders

In its campaign to halt the spenders, and to bring some measure of economy and business prudence into Chicago and Cook County governments, the Better Government Association, at a special meeting of its Board of Directors, held Friday June 2, passed resolutions against Senate bills Nos. 260, 261, 484, 485 and 501, now in the House of Representatives urging legislators to vote and work against these bills.

The following resolutions were passed by the Board:

Be it resolved, by the Board of Directors of the Better Government Association of Chicago and Cook County, that the Association declare its opposition to Senate bills Nos. 260, 261, 484, 485 and 501, which have already been passed by the Illinois Senate, two of them without committee reference and all without public hearings, and which are now up in the House of Representatives for action. Our opposition to these bills is based upon the following:

1. That these bills permit the City of Chicago to issue bonds beyond the legal limit for the purpose of paying judgments issued against the City.

2. That these bills permit the issuance of such bonds by the City of Chicago or the County of Cook without a referendum vote, as otherwise required by law.

3. That these bills permit the levying of taxes by said City or County beyond the legal limits to pay principle and interest of such bonds.

4. That these bills will for many years to come permit a burden to be placed upon the taxpayers, without their knowledge and consent, greatly in excess of the amounts of the judgments to be paid through the issuance of such bonds.

5. That the passing of these bills at this time is political in its nature and intended to deceive the taxpayers as to the present financial condition of the city and county.

6. That we believe the findings of the so-called "Avery Commission" demonstrate beyond reasonable doubt that a proper business administration of the various governing bodies of Chicago and Cook County would save sufficient monies to pay all judgments now pending against any and all of these bodies without increase taxation.

7. That increased indebtedness and increased taxes which will result from the passage of these bills will react unfavorably upon the entire State of Illinois through the injuries done to individuals and businesses within the limits of Cook County.

8. That there has never been any adequate accounting made by any of the governing bodies of Chicago or Cook County of the funds received and expended by such bodies.

And, be it further resolved, that copies of these resolutions be sent to all Senators and Representatives in the Illinois Legislature and that they be urged to place themselves on record against these bills; and that copies also be sent to all organizations interested in the public welfare, with the request that these organizations join with the Better Government Association in bringing about the defeat of these bills.

From behind the rock, Breck leveled his gun on a black opening between two giant trunks that stood like gate posts at the opposite end of the bridge. Sound of approach came nearer. The riders would first pass through a hollow where trees grew thick.

Abruptly a horse thrust its white face between the two trunks. It came on. Another followed.

"Pardner!" Breck whispered. He steadied his aim over the flat rock top.

"Wait till they get on the bridge," Sierra advised. "Call out once. If they move to break away, let 'em have it."

Breck watched behind his sights. Jud rode in the lead, straight, alert. Hep crouched in his saddle. They came upon the narrow bridge with horses walking nose to tail; reached the center. Breck rose with a command that was never uttered.

All in a split second the two horses were plunging on with saddles empty. Though watching the spot, sides that, she had to get old Tom and the Senator out."

He mounted, giving orders. "You ride that north canyon. JG and some of his boys are up there. Slim and I will go to a bunch working on Nine Mile. Do what you can; God knows we're blind without a wire to Kern Peak."

What they could do was little enough. Breck realized that when he came upon Jackson and a handful of cowpunchers. The cowman met him, grim-faced, as he said, "We've done our damndest, Ranger."

Breck took up his tools and plunged into the endless job of clearing brush. But only a giant, able to tear trees by the roots, could have held the blaze that swept steadily upward. Night came; men had to sleep. They dropped on the ground for two-hour turns, Breck waiting until his legs collapsed beneath him.

Dawn rose over that most desolate of sights—a mountain range being laid waste. Throughout the morning Breck flung his wearied crew against the line, yet they were blocked. Even as they built back Here he had saved Louise from the cattle stampede. He had carried her home in his arms. They yearned for her now. That day he had not known what it was to love. Desperation swept upon him. He could make life happy for her. She could paint. They would live below . . . winters. But summers they must come back. Realization of that struck him forcibly. Bound into his love for Louise, growing out of it, was a love for the High Sierras.

Temple Meadow, since he last saw it, had changed from fiesta grounds to hospital ward. He loped in before evening, coming among cots beneath the pines where men lay asleep with arms and faces in white cloths.

Dad Cook came from a shed and hailed him. "Dam' me if you don't look like an old-timer. Mountain man for sure! Son, you've earned a rest and you'd better grab it. Slim's getting his."

"Louise here?" Breck asked, even before he reached the ground.

"In the cabin. She's all right. Been worried?"

Breck dropped upon a log, relaxed tension suddenly leaving him unsteady.

"Better turn in," Cook advised him, "and count this job done. We've got some black forest, but she's otherwise cleaned up." He paused, drawing an envelope from his pocket. "Here's something for you. The Senator's party went out with the first pack train. Had enough mountains, but he knows a sight more than when he came in. I think we'll name a trail for him yet."

Breck tore open the letter. It was from Irene. He expected something, not knowing exactly what. A change of some sort. But here was still the evasive writing, poured out in unfinished thoughts—until the end. There she wrote: "Arthur is a dear boy, Gordon. Don't put him in jail. I lied to him beautifully. We quite understand each other now."

"What about Art?" Breck asked.

"The doctor packed him down last night. He'll pull through."

"I mean what are we to do about him?"

Without hesitation Cook answered, "Give him a chance. You're finished with the Tillsons. Hep was the one. Ask Lou."

But when Breck found Louise, it was not to ask her that. She came from Temple's shanty, softly closing the door. Her eyes welcomed him, yet were filled with trouble.

"Your father is worse?" she asked. She nodded. "The fire was too much. He shouldn't have gone."

They moved from the cabin and Breck led her into the pines where the words would not carry back.

"Louise, I'm going to send your father out. I know a surgeon. He'll do wonders."

She stood with eyes averted, though one hand clasped his tightly. "While he is there," Breck continued, "you and I will work two jobs—the forest and the ranch." He hesitated. It had never occurred to him that it would be hard to tell this girl he loved her. Now he seemed wordless. He wished she would help.

She looked up. "We?"

That was enough. His arms swept her close. "We, yes, you and I together. Louise! I love you, want you always." All at once words rushed too swiftly where there had been none. "We can live the life we have talked about. Outside, then here. You need not answer now—until you know more of me."

"Know you?" Her eyes and her voice checked him. "Don't I know you? Haven't you shown me what you are, over and over again?"

"But nothing of who I am," he asserted.

"And of course that matters!"

"Doesn't it?"

"No." Gently she lifted her hands to his face, drawing him down. "Not here nor any place I know of! And if you want my answer at all, take it now."

[THE END.]

Breck sprang up. Sparks were eating the cloth of his shirt.

Breck scarcely caught a glimpse of two bodies hurtling downward into the gorge. He whirled to Sierra. Sierra faced him. Neither had shot, yet the mountains still echoed to the crack of guns.

"Rifles!" Sierra gasped. "Back of us!"

Breck turned. "The nesters?"

Up the bank behind them, horses were being hard-riden to the crest. They passed over and the sound died.

Sierra leaped from the rock. "No use following up there now! We've got to get out of here. That fire's traveling!"

"Wait," said Breck. "I want to be sure of this."

"Them two didn't live to hit bottom!" Sierra flung out. "Come on!"

But Breck ran to the bridge, knelt and peered over. Only white water, foaming through jagged rocks of the gorge, met his eyes. He stared at it, drawn tense by a vision of Hep Tillson's treacherous face. The man who had killed Jim Cotter was dead!

"Pardner!"

Breck sprang up. Sparks were eating the cloth of his shirt. A red wave curled over the opposite ridge.

"We've got to move," Sierra shouted. "Cook will be needing us bad!"

CHAPTER XXIII

Cook did need them. They climbed a ridge east of Sulphur and looked across to a small round meadow halfway up Kern Peak's flank. Fire had already swept two sides of Indian Rock. The blaze coming up at their backs would soon complete the circle. All the country for miles both north and south lay under smoke.

"Sierra swung from his horse. 'Ought to begin here and make our firebreak on the way down,' he advised."

It was past noon when they had finished a break and rode into camp. Cook was there.

"Saw you coming," he said briefly. "It's a good job you did yonder. How about the Sulphur business?"

"Nesters saved us a couple of shots," was Sierra's laconic report.

"Where's Louise?" Breck asked.

"Gone out. It looked like we were going to be surrounded and someone had to reach a telephone. She's trying to make it to your station."

"Rock House?" Breck gasped. "Good God!" He looked south into a pall of smoke. "That whole trail's under fire!"

"I know it," Cook admitted. "Someone had to go, and she wouldn't let me spare a man. Be-fires in one canyon, spots flared further on.

Toward noon he rode to a bald knob, hoping to get some idea of their position. He was half an hour in climbing up and found that the point which had seemed so high was still lower than those around it. He sat numbed in mind and body. In another day the whole South Sierra would be stripped. Only a miracle could save the forest.

He did not believe in miracles, though as he rested on the knob there sounded a far-off droning. It puzzled him; recognition of its magic came slowly. Then suddenly he knew. Not the miracle of rain from a cloudless sky, nor an unseen hand beating back the flames, but of a winged man.

The droning surged into a roar as a white ship burst through rolls of smoke. It shot close over his position and he read the letters: USFS. From somewhere word had gone outside!

Swept with grateful impulse he lifted clasped hands high toward it. The plane banked as if answering, circled, and upon passing once more, dropped a long white ribbon. Breck rushed to it, found a small bag weighted with sand, then a tube of paper.

"Relief," it said, "coming in from Sequoia."

Swinging upon Kit, he raced from the knob and shouted the magic word to his men below. "They've got us located, boys. We'll get relief now."

The plane's promise was not fulfilled through the afternoon nor in the first hours of dark. But about midnight Breck saw back fires springing up over a ten mile front both north and south, and by morning the line was almost solid. Hundreds of men must have poured up Kern River gap under the air patrol's direction.

It was a little before mid-day that a lean, brown-faced man rode in at the head of an emergency crew. He halted among Jackson's cowboys and swung off. "I guess you fellows have had enough of it. Is Breck here?"

Breck went to him.

"I'm Green," the man said, "from Sequoia. We'll finish this. Cook says for you to meet him at Temple Meadow."

"Did you get the call through Rock House Station?" Breck asked, his first thought for Louise.

"I don't know," Green answered. Fear shot strength into Breck's deadened body. He threw on his saddle and rode at once. All the way as he climbed a summit then dropped into Long Canyon, a dread goaded him on. A familiar spot in the canyon momentarily turned his thoughts to another day.

Middle Ages Attempted to Guard From Infection; 'Cholera Man' Wore Costume

The dangers of contagion have been known for centuries, but the use of sensible, efficient measures to guard against contagion had to wait for the discoveries of the modern sciences of bacteriology and chemistry.

An idea of how the Middle ages attempted to guard from infection the "cholera man" who was called upon to care for cholera patients is afforded in the directions prescribing the costume which the "cholera man" was to wear.

To resist the dread disease he was to be equipped, according to the best advice of those days, as follows:

"About his body first a layer of India rubber, thereupon a large pitch plaster; on top of this a bandage of six yards of flannel. On the pit of his stomach a copper plate, on the chest a large box of warm sand. Around the neck a double bandage filled with juniper berries and grains of pepper; in the ears two pieces of cotton wool with camphor; hung on the nose a smelling bottle containing vinegar, and in the mouth a twig of sweet calamus.

"Over the bandage a shirt, soaked in chloride of lime, over that a cotton wool jacket and a hot brick and, finally, a vest sprinkled with chloride of lime. Then a mantle made of oilcloth and a hat of the same. In his right pocket he carries one pound of balm mint tea, a half-pound of earlome thistle and a half-pound of sage. In his vest pocket he carries a bottle containing camomile oil and in his trousers pocket a bottle of camphor.

"On his hat he balances a tureen of thick gruel, in his right hand he carries a shrub of juniper, and in his left hand an acacia branch. Strapped to his body is a small wagon which he pulls after him and in which there are 15 yards of flannel, a boiling kettle, 10 scrubbing brushes, 18 bricks, two hides and a comfort stool. He must wear a mask made of curly-mint paste and keep a quarter of a pound of calamus in his mouth."

CHILD of EVIL

BY

OCTAVUS ROY COHEN

One night, on a dark road, brutal tragedy strikes the little community of Beverly, Southern resort town. A cold-blooded killing involves Kirk Reynolds, worthless gambler, and Kay Forrest, a beautiful nineteen-year-old girl.

From this point on, the community is torn by dissension and strife, the clamor reaching fever heat after two dramatic events, one of them the incomprehensible marriage of Kay to Kirk.

Here is the real deep South, revealed in its unique colors and character types, and coming from the pen of one of the most discerning authors writing today about the provincial South and its people.

"Child of Evil" is a thoroughly enjoyable story . . . one that will hold your interest from the first page through the last.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

By HAROLD L. LUNDQUIST, D. D.
Dean of The Moody Bible Institute

Lesson for June 11

PAUL SOLVES CHURCH PROBLEMS

LESSON TEXT—I Corinthians 1:1-3, 10, 11; 4:14-21; I Thessalonians 5:12-15.
GOLDEN TEXT—Only let your conversation be as it becometh the gospel of Christ.—Philippians 1:27.

Victory over the destructive powers of sickness is achieved by an orderly attack of the problem. The doctor first makes a study of the condition of his patient, observing not only the outward symptoms, but the general condition of the body. He proceeds to isolate and identify the evil forces which are causing the disease, and then he is ready to apply his curative remedies and procedures.

The Church is sick today even as it was in Paul's day. We are in need of the sound advice and the effective example of "Doctor Paul" and therefore do well to apply to ourselves and to our churches the lesson of today. As we do this honestly we may find in ourselves that which is making our own church weak and ineffective. Let us apply the cure even though the process of healing may be a painful one.

I. The Condition.

What's wrong with the Church? The excerpts from the letters of Paul which make up our lesson reveal three fundamental difficulties which exist in essentially the same form today.

1. False Teachers (Gal. 3). This passage is a part of our lesson although not included in the printed portion. It tells us of Paul's masterly dealing with false teachers. Erroneous teaching and the substitution of the philosophies of men for the Word of God are responsible for much of the trouble in the Church. It is decidedly not a matter of indifference what your pastor teaches, what your Sunday School lesson helps teach, and what your Sunday School teachers present to their classes.

2. Divisions (I Cor. 1:10). Sometimes these occur over doctrine, sometimes over church procedure, but all too often over the most insignificant things. Frequently they center around personal likes and dislikes. Cliques and little closed groups have no place in the Church. Man-worship in place of the worship of God will also wreck a church.

3. Contentions (I Cor. 1:11). For some unexplainable reason the people who love a fight seem to want to do their fighting in the Church.

II. The Cause.

The internal troubles of the Church cannot be blamed on its testimony or on its responsibility in the world, and certainly not on its Lord. The real cause of the Church's problems will be found in men and women who are not living as they should.

1. The Contentious (I Cor. 1:11). These are the fighters.

2. The Puffed Up (I Cor. 4:18). They have an exaggerated idea of their own importance.

3. The Disorderly (I Thess. 4:14). Unruly and erratic folk trouble the Church.

4. The Faint-Hearted (I Thess. 5:14, R. V.). Timid and uncertain individuals limit and hinder God's work.

5. The Weak (I Thess. 5:14). They are feeble in spiritual insight and power.

III. The Cure.

Diagnosis and location of the cause of a disease is practically useless unless a course of treatment is carried out. Consider the steps in the treatment of the sickness of the Church and then apply the remedy.

1. Remember that it is a "church of God" (I Cor. 1:2).

2. Recall and follow the true teaching of God's Word (I Cor. 4:17).

3. Receive grace and peace from the Father and the Son (I Cor. 1:3).

4. Recognize those appointed by the Lord to be over the church as leaders and teachers (I Thess. 5:12-16).

5. Be ashamed of ungodly misbehavior (I Cor. 4:14).

6. Deal plainly with sin and disorder (I Cor. 4:21). The knife of the surgeon may cause pain but it is often the way to healing.

7. Warn those who are unruly (I Thess. 5:14). The word of spiritual admonition is too often lacking in the church.

8. Comfort and encourage the faint-hearted (I Thess. 5:14). Unrenewed man has no patience with such folk, but God does. A note of encouragement needs to be stressed in these trying days.

9. Be patient toward all men (I Thess. 5:15). If you feel that you must be impatient, be impatient with your own faults. Patience is a Christian virtue which has almost been lost in the dizzy, high-pressure age in which we live. Let us cultivate it both in the church and in the hearts of believers.

Watch Your Kidneys!

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery. Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder may be burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wiser than neglect. Use Doan's Pills. Doan's have been winning new friends for more than forty years. They have a nation-wide reputation. Are recommended by grateful people the country over. Ask your neighbor!

Orioles Defeat Joliet Team

With Wes Cappel pitching air-tight ball, the Orioles won a close contest from the Joliet Club of Joliet last Sunday which proved to be one of the best games played in the Joliet City league this season. Wes pitched a great ball game until the seventh inning when his arm became sore as a result of not having pitched many games this season. George Henline finished the game and held the Joliet Club batters trailing with the final score of 3 to 2. The Mokena team played heads up ball as shown by the way the first two runs were scored.

Henline, the first man up in the second inning singled to center, Rinke laid down a bunt along the third base line and beat the throw to first for a hit, putting runners on first and second. Hauser laid down a bunt along the first base line moving the runners to second and third with one out. Frisch lined a hit to right center driving in the two runners.

Sunday the Mokena Orioles travel to Troy to play the Troy Merchants in a city league game. It starts at 3.00 p. m.
